Senior Art Class at Park Hill Residence

BY DEBORAH CAMERON

It's never too late to try something new for senior residents at Park Hill Residence at 1901 Eudora St. They are enjoying the opportunity to use their creativity this spring by participating in art and drawing classes designed especially for them by Jennie Tselvea, a junior at Denver School of the Arts.

Tselvea, who is volunteering her time on the project, enjoys the opportunity to work with these older adults. "I think that art is a great outlet for emotions and I enjoy the time I spend listening to stories of class members," she says. "When working with or regional, drought-tolerant plants. Select plants will be offered, as well. Other plant varieties include perennials, herbs, roses, vegetables, water plants, orchids, patio baskets, rock alpine plants and much more.

Admission to the sale is free. While visiting the Gardens, guests can enjoy the 2008 signature exhibition, "Urban Nature," which visually addresses the intersection of plant and city life.
